" Gladstone's Elequence. THE POWER OF THE EX-PREMIER IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Last night Mr. Gladstone's resolutions were defeated in Parliament by the large majority of 131. The telegraph will have given you this statement, but it may not have added that in the struggle on the Eastern question, which ended last night, Mr. Gladstone got much more of the victory than the Gevernment. All England breathes freer, for the war-for-Turkey party its majority only by backing down from to marry a young clergyman from Indiana. the Beaconsfield Derby programme and The South Hiller is a sweet, fair young girl competing with Gladstone in the now, and never the shadow of a cloud has as the man who has a stolen watch has got out of bed two or three hundred in his pocket escapes by joining in times to make up shake downs and cook the hue and cry "Stop thief"! The whole supper for nine brethren on their way to a thing has been very remarkable. When convention or conference, who have got in Lord Derby wrote his supercillous and pro- on the late train and couldn't find the way vocative reply to Russia it was in the full to the hotel.-Hawkeye. belief that the indignation raised by the shared that belief. Gladstone was the only forward they declared they would vote Herald. against him, and so the Liberal party would be divided. Then, ltke Roland in the Roncesvalles story, Gladstone wound his born. The sound was heard in every part of the kingdom. Meetings were held in every city, town, hamlet, chapel, club, all standing by Gladstone, and in less than a week the Bulgarian indignation was all back again. Whereupon the Hartingtonian Liberals went to their reactionary leader and cried: "We be all dead men." You have, as our opposition leader, put yourself in antagonism to Gladstone's resolution; but our constituents are with Glad- for some weeks she expressed her fears that stone, and if we vote against him we it would be inconvenient for him to come might as well resign our seats." Where- so far on her account. "Oh, madam," reupon Hartington went to Gladstone with plied the Doctor, innocently, "I have ana very different tone from the first; other patient in the neighborhood, and thus went with an appeal ad misericord- I can kill two birds with one stone."-Bosiam, and begged bim to build a golden ton Advertiser. bridge for his retreat. Thereupon Gladstone agreed not to divide the House on two of his resolutions. The Tories came next. The feeling in the country which they had deemed a momentary flash was found to be a fire that might smoulder, but could not be extinguished, and might flame when Gladstone chose to 1an it. The Government were willing to accept the two remaining resolutions if their author would only make them affirm faith in their neutral intentions. Gladstone had no such faith. He plainly told them that he meant to denounce them, and that though he would not challenge a vote of the House on some of his resolutions he adhered to and meant to grind us into oblivious dust and shroud us defend them. He therefore compelled them to fight, and the vote last night must be regarded as not upon the policy of England in the East, but more upon a censure of the Government; for in the course of the debate the Government, as I have intimated, had to alter their tone altogether. They had to proclaim unequivocally their neutrality, their alienation from Turkey, their sympathy with the feeling in the nation. They had to eat their own words, including the Derby dispatch; and now for the first time there is some assurance that England will not go into the war. Much of the effect which has been produced must be attribu-been heard in the House of Commons. The row, the taunts with which Gladstone was greeted when he announced that he would not press two of his resolutions to a vote, came partly from the radicals, but mainly from the Government benches, where it was recognized that the hoped-for split in the opposition ranks had been escaped. The Marquis of Hartington and his friends sat dumb, knowing that the taunts were suffered by Gladstone vicariously in order to save them from the necessity of literally fulfilling their pledge to the House (of voting against Gladstone) and so ruining them with their constituents. But these clamors put Gladstone on his mettle, and he knew the nation was with him; so he flung himself into the thing with a freedom and fullness which were never more prudent than when they seemed most rash. An old parliamentary writer, who has sat in the gallery for thirty years.

told me that in all that time he had never heard Gladstone in such form, and that the orator surprised him with unsuspected powers. The Times spoke of his "passionate cloquence," but the phrase is a very moderate expression of the power with which he gathered up and concentrated the sympathies of the house. In the course of his speech he made a gesture which probably was never before seen in which probably was never before seen in the house, and which in any ordinary state of feeling in that body would have been regarded as theatrical. Speaking of the oppressed provinces as praying the civilized world for succor, Gladstone clasped his hands together, with tightly interlocked fingers, and raised them in the attitude of prayer, as his voice lowed to a corresponding tone. The speech and the accompanying feeling of the house had passed to a point where the gesture was simply and naturally dramatic, and the orator's most inveterate enemy could not have ventured to mar the solemnity of the moment by a smile.

The debate which closed last night can hardly fail to become an event of historic importance in the affairs of Europe. It has determined that Russia shall not possess Constantinople as a prize of the present war; but it has rendered it tolerably clear that if Russia shall defeat Turkey, as is proward and be accorded advantages from MILLINERY. which she has hitherto been excuued.
